

Building Excellence[®]

Spring 2010

The official magazine of the Canadian Manufactured Housing Institute

Making the GREEN
TEAM

The Art of the Suite

Styles come and go, but the concept of uniformity of design remains when it comes to home décor and finishing. Builders and designers strive to match styling, finishes and function in design to create that continuous look that encourages homebuyers to “ooh” and “aah” when they enter a home.

“At Taymor, we view interior space from a holistic perspective, one in which each room is unique, and yet still true to the overall design of the home. Space is something that is brought to life through the craftsmanship of the builder and the choice of the decorative hardware. We call it ‘suite-ing,’” says Taymor Industries’ Vice President Builders Markets, Doug McLean.

The business of suiteing has become an art, especially in the area of decorative and builders hardware. Suite-ing products is not just choosing a design, but “capturing the essence” of a room. From hinges to locks to bathware, the overall look is critical. Heritage, modern and transitional designs can be communicated through the accessories and hardware within the home.

The right front door handle can be accented with matching finishes and style in the surrounding door hardware. House numbers in a modern style can accent a simple, clean-styled lever or entrance handle. Further accent with a satin chrome viewer, door knocker, and hinges and you have created an elegant modern entrance suite.

Photos courtesy of Taymor Industries

“Suiteing” doesn’t stop at the door. Taymor offers a wide range of hardware solutions for the bathroom, kitchen and other parts of the home.

McLean says that providing builders and designers with the tools they need to capture the design inspiration of homebuyers is critical to the success of the project. “We believe that if the builder and designer are well-informed about the products and finishes available, and how they can be put together in a coordinated suite, we can save them time and help ensure the project exceeds their buyers’ expectations.” ■

Making a grand entrance – Taymor’s suiteing program helps builders exceed homebuyer expectations whether their design inspiration is heritage, modern or transitional.

